In the 1960s one of the largest and most diverse unions in America, Teamsters Local 743, articulated a message of upward mobility to its low-wage members and members participated in the construction of their own understanding of what lifting themselves up meant. This presentation will discuss this relationship in the context of the civil rights movement, the labor movement on the eve of deindustrialization.